Understanding Jen Wilkin's Bible Study Method

Jen Wilkin is renowned for her distinctive approach to Bible study, often referred to as inductive or observational study. This method emphasizes diligent, faithful engagement with the biblical text itself, seeking to understand what God's Word says before delving into commentaries or secondary sources. The core principle is to let the Bible speak for itself, allowing the Holy Spirit to illuminate its meaning. This investigative process typically involves three key stages: observation, interpretation, and application.

Observation: What Does the Text Say?

The observation phase is foundational to Jen Wilkin's studies. It involves carefully reading and rereading a passage, noting specific details, patterns, repeated words or phrases, literary structures, and the overall flow of thought. The goal is to gather as much objective information from the text as possible, answering the question, "What does the text say?" This might involve identifying characters, timelines, commands, promises, or theological concepts present within the passage. Active engagement, such as journaling observations or highlighting key verses, is crucial during this stage.

Interpretation: What Does the Text Mean?

Once a thorough observation has been made, the next step is interpretation. This stage seeks to understand the meaning of the text in its original context. It involves considering the author's intent, the historical and cultural background, the literary genre, and how the passage fits within the broader biblical narrative. Jen Wilkin often guides students to consider who wrote the text, to whom it was written, and why. Understanding the original audience and the purpose of the writing is paramount to accurate interpretation. This is where theological understanding and the guidance of the Holy Spirit are vital.

Application: How Should We Live?

The final stage of Jen Wilkin's method is application. This is where the discovered truth is brought into one's personal life. It involves prayerfully considering how the revealed meaning of the text impacts one's beliefs, attitudes, and actions. Application is not about creating a new message but about responding obediently to the truth already present in the Word. This stage encourages intentional discipleship, leading to transformation and a deeper walk with God. The focus is on living out the unchanging truths of scripture in a changing world.
