Understanding Reflexive and Intensive Pronouns

Reflexive and intensive pronouns are special forms of personal pronouns that end in -self or -selves. They are used to refer back to the subject of the sentence, but they serve different grammatical purposes. Reflexive pronouns are necessary to complete the meaning of a sentence when the subject and object are the same. Intensive pronouns, on the other hand, emphasize the subject without altering the sentence's core meaning.

What Are Reflexive Pronouns?

Reflexive pronouns reflect the action of the verb back onto the subject. They include words such as myself, yourself, himself, herself, itself, ourselves, yourselves, and themselves. These pronouns are essential when the subject performs an action on itself. For example, in the sentence "She taught herself to play the piano," the pronoun "herself" is reflexive, indicating that the subject and the object are the same.

What Are Intensive Pronouns?

Intensive pronouns use the same forms as reflexive pronouns but function differently. Their primary role is to add emphasis to a noun or pronoun already mentioned in the sentence. For instance, in “The CEO herself approved the project,” the pronoun “herself” intensifies the subject “The CEO.” Unlike reflexive pronouns, removing an intensive pronoun does not change the sentence’s fundamental meaning.

Key Differences Between Reflexive and Intensive Pronouns

While reflexive and intensive pronouns share identical forms, understanding their grammatical differences is crucial. This distinction is the foundation of effective language use and is often reinforced through worksheets designed specifically for this purpose.

Function in Sentences

Reflexive pronouns act as objects, reflecting the action back to the subject. Intensive pronouns serve solely as modifiers to emphasize the subject or another noun. This difference informs how these pronouns are used in writing and speech.

Necessity in Sentences

Reflexive pronouns are necessary for the sentence to make sense when the subject and object are the same. Intensive pronouns are optional and used only for emphasis. For example, “He fixed the car himself” uses “himself” intensively and can be shortened to “He fixed the car” without losing meaning.

Position in Sentences

Reflexive pronouns often follow the verb or preposition as objects, while intensive pronouns typically appear immediately after the noun or pronoun they emphasize. Recognizing this positional difference assists in identifying and correctly using these pronouns.
