Frequently Asked Questions

What is sex trafficking and how does it relate to modern slavery?

Sex trafficking is the illegal trade of humans for the purpose of sexual exploitation, often involving coercion, force, or deception. It is a form of modern slavery where victims are controlled and exploited for profit.

How do traffickers typically recruit victims for sex trafficking?

Traffickers often use tactics such as false job offers, emotional manipulation, abduction, or exploiting vulnerabilities like poverty and lack of education to recruit victims for sex trafficking.

What industries or businesses are commonly linked to sex trafficking?

Sex trafficking is frequently linked to industries such as commercial sex businesses, hospitality, massage parlors, strip clubs, and illicit online platforms that facilitate sexual exploitation.

What role does technology play in facilitating sex trafficking in modern times?

Technology, including social media, encrypted messaging apps, and online marketplaces, is used by traffickers to recruit victims, advertise services, and evade law enforcement, making sex trafficking more covert and widespread.

How can businesses help combat sex trafficking within their industries?

Businesses can implement strict hiring practices, conduct employee training, establish reporting mechanisms, collaborate with law enforcement and NGOs, and enforce zero-tolerance policies against exploitation to combat sex trafficking.

What are the signs that someone might be a victim of sex trafficking in a business setting?

Signs include restricted freedom of movement, lack of personal identification documents, signs of physical abuse, fearfulness, inconsistent stories, and being accompanied by controlling individuals.

What legal frameworks exist to address sex trafficking and modern slavery in business?

Laws such as the Trafficking Victims Protection Act (TVPA) in the U.S., the Palermo Protocol internationally, and various national anti-trafficking laws criminalize sex trafficking and require businesses to take measures to prevent and report exploitation.
