Understanding the Role of Suffixes “-ed” and “-ing”

Suffixes “-ed” and “-ing” serve critical grammatical functions in English, primarily related to verb tense and aspect. Adding “-ed” typically forms the past tense or past participle of regular verbs, indicating completed actions. In contrast, “-ing” creates the present participle or gerund, expressing ongoing actions or states. Understanding these suffixes is foundational for developing effective communication skills, as they allow speakers and writers to convey time and continuity accurately.

The Function of the Suffix “-ed”

The suffix “-ed” is predominantly used to form the simple past tense and past participle of regular verbs. This suffix signals that an event happened in the past or has been completed. For example, “walk” becomes “walked,” indicating the action occurred previously. It also plays a role in perfect tenses when combined with auxiliary verbs, such as “has walked.” Mastery of this suffix helps learners construct grammatically correct sentences relating to past events.

The Function of the Suffix “-ing”

The suffix “-ing” forms the present participle and gerund forms of verbs, which are essential for expressing continuous or progressive actions. For instance, “run” changes to “running,” which can describe an action currently in progress (“She is running”) or function as a noun (“Running is fun”). Recognizing and applying “-ing” correctly is vital for describing ongoing activities and forming complex verb tenses.
