Background of the Boxer Rebellion

The Boxer Rebellion, also known as the Yihetuan Movement, was an anti-foreign, anti-colonial, and anti-Christian uprising that took place in China between 1899 and 1901. It was initiated by a secret society known as the "Boxers," who sought to expel foreign influence from China. The rebellion arose amid growing dissatisfaction with foreign privileges and missionary activities, as well as the Qing dynasty's weakening control over the country.

The conflict escalated when the Boxers besieged foreign legations in Beijing, prompting an international coalition to intervene. The rebellion ended with the defeat of the Boxers and the imposition of severe penalties on China through the Boxer Protocol of 1901. This historical event is frequently referenced in educational contexts and crossword puzzles due to its geopolitical significance and dramatic narrative.
