Overview of The Great Gatsby Chapter Two

Chapter Two of The Great Gatsby introduces a darker, more complex side of the novel's world. This chapter shifts the setting from the affluent East Egg and West Egg to the desolate and industrial Valley of Ashes. The narrative focuses on Tom Buchanan's affair with Myrtle Wilson, offering a glimpse into the moral decay and social stratification that underpin the story. The chapter is essential for understanding the tensions between characters and the broader themes of wealth, class, and desire that define the novel.

Setting and Atmosphere

The Valley of Ashes serves as a bleak backdrop symbolizing the consequences of industrialization and the corruption lurking beneath the glittering surface of the wealthy characters' lives. This setting contrasts sharply with the opulence of Gatsby's parties and the Buchanans' lifestyle, emphasizing themes of decay and disillusionment.

Main Characters Introduced or Highlighted

In addition to Nick Carraway and Tom Buchanan, Chapter Two prominently features Myrtle Wilson, Tom's mistress. Her character represents the lower social class and the consequences of aspiring to wealth. George Wilson, her husband, is also introduced, embodying the powerless and downtrodden in contrast to Tom's arrogance and dominance.
