Background and Inspiration of "Behold the Lamb of God"

The song "Behold the Lamb of God" by Andrew Peterson emerges from a deep well of biblical imagery and personal reflection. Written as a modern hymn, it draws heavily on the New Testament depiction of Jesus Christ as the Lamb who takes away the sins of the world. Peterson was inspired by scripture passages such as John 1:29 and Revelation 5:6, which highlight the sacrificial role of Christ in Christian theology. The song was originally released as part of Peterson's 2004 album, which focused on themes of grace, redemption, and worship.

Peterson's intention was to create a song that could be used in both personal devotion and corporate worship settings, resonating with believers who seek to meditate on the meaning of Christ's sacrifice. The emotional weight of the song is rooted in its scriptural authenticity and Peterson's ability to translate complex theological concepts into accessible, poetic language.

Context within Andrew Peterson's Discography

"Behold the Lamb of God" fits within a larger narrative arc present in Peterson's musical catalog, which often explores biblical stories and spiritual truths.
